How do i know if it's happening to me?

You could be a victim of domestic violence if someone close to you is:

- threatening to hurt you, your children, other family members or pets
- hurting you physically
- forcing you to have sex, or do things you don't want to do
- yelling or humiliating you (ex: calling you names, insulting you)
- isolating you from friends and family
- keeping track of your emails, phone calls and Internet use
- not allowing you food, clothing, medication or other things you need
- controlling your finances
- controlling where you go, or what you do

What is domestic violence?

Domestic violence happens when people in intimate relationships (currently or previously dating, married or living together) use abusive behaviour to control or hurt their partners.

Domestic violence happens to women and men of all ages, cultures, income levels, religions, professions and abilities. It can happen in heterosexual and same-sex relationships. Women, younger adults, people with disabilities, and recently separated women and men, are even more at risk for abuse.

What is family violence?

Other forms of abuse that happen within families can also have serious affects, for example elder abuse, abuse by immediate and extended family members, etc. Services are also available if this is happening in your family.

Who does it affect?

Domestic violence can affect many others besides the victim. These include other family members, friends, neighbours, co-workers and pets.

Domestic violence often affects children. They are more likely to develop behavioural problems, and may grow up believing abuse is part of a normal relationship.
